Ideas for working with whānau

Suggestions for working closely with parents, caregivers, and whānau.

- ✓ Communicate and share information in ways that work for everyone, for example, social media, playground conversations, email, Skype, a notebook, class blog, newsletters with photos.
- ✓ Value parents' and caregivers' knowledge about their child and assessments they have had done out of school.
- ✓ Involve whānau in determining strategies to support student learning and well-being at home and school.
- ✓ Work with programmes or materials parents are using to maximise consistency and support for the student.
- ✓ Share information about out-of-school programmes that may boost self-esteem (for example, groups for music, art, or sporting interests).
- ✓ Recognise areas of expertise and experience and look for opportunities to explicitly value and utilise them in the classroom.

Engage with whānau and iwi

Strong engagement and contribution from students and those who are best placed to support them – parents and whānau, hapū, iwi, Māori organisations, communities and businesses – have a strong influence on students' success. Māori students' learning is strengthened when education professionals include a role for parents and whānau, hapū, iwi, and Māori organisations and communities in curriculum, teaching and learning.

Listen to families

Parents, Dayna and Phil, found sharing successful approaches and incorporating their daughter's interests reduced anxiety and provided consistency between home and school.

Useful resources

Perspectives of whānau

Parents of students needing additional support outline their needs and how schools can best work with them to meet those needs. Key information is from the ERO report Partners in learning: Parents' voices. An example of practice from a primary school and discussion questions are provided on this page from the Inclusive Practices website (NZ).
