Consider these questions in your own context.

How do you share stories of progress in culturally responsive ways?

How do you ensure ākonga, whānau, and kaiako each have a voice in the storytelling?

How do you ensure barriers to making and sharing progress are identified and removed?

How do you collate stories to celebrate ākonga and their learning in meaningful ways?

How can you continue to support ākonga and their whānau with their learning pathway?
