Develop a culturally responsive approach

Russell Bishop explains, students must be able to bring their own experiences to the classroom and see that their experiences are accepted and valued. Then, Māori will be part of the learning process as Māori.”

Connect to personal experiences

Support students to make connections within relevant contexts, such as sharing a mihi.

They'd feel a lot more confident talking about something that they were certain about, like their heritage, rather than something that they had gone and taken out of, say, library books, to present to the class.

Linda Sweeny, Associate Principal, Te Kura o Tiori Burnham School

Useful resources

Culture speaks: Cultural relationships and classroom learning

This book focuses on what it is like to be a young Māori person in a New Zealand secondary school classroom today. It presents and discusses narratives drawn from the voices of secondary-level ākonga Māori, their whānau, tumuaki, and kaiako.
